

Malignant melanoma of the breast: a case report and review of the literature

Marcus Tan¹, Allison Howard², and Amy E Cyr¹

¹Department of Surgery, and ²Department of Pathology, Washington University, St Louis, MO, USA

ABSTRACT

Primary breast melanoma is a rare entity that on routine histology may be mistaken for triple-negative breast cancer. A high degree of clinical suspicion is necessary to make this diagnosis. This case report describes the presentation and treatment of primary breast melanoma.

Key words: breast melanoma, malignant melanoma, metastatic disease to the breast.

No financial support was received for this paper.

This work has never been published and the authors have no financial disclosures.

Correspondence to: Amy E Cyr, MD,
100 Entrance Way, St Peters, MO
63376, USA.
Tel +1-636-916 7160;
fax +1-636-916 7190;
email cyra@wudosis.wustl.edu

Received March 5, 2012;
accepted April 24, 2012.